Maria,

Here is the approved Nixon tweet statement we issued:

The mission of the National Archives when using official social media accounts is to raise awareness of our public programs, assist the public with access to our holdings, and engage the public in communication about the Nation's records and what those records say about our history. As a Federal government agency, the National Archives does not condone or engage in partisan or political conversations.

The Nixon Library and Museum posted a Tweet Tuesday, May 9, that was not representative of the policies of the Library or the National Archives.

The National Archives is examining the training provided to employees who post to official social media channels as well as reviewing work flows and approval processes to ensure that our social media efforts engage the public in constructive conversations in line with agency policies.
